Rhine Extra...

To spearhead 83rd Regiment, U.S. Army, the German Press, and the Associated Press, came the news that the 83rd Division, the 2nd American division to cross the Rhine, had reached the south bank of the river. This was the first American division to cross the Rhine in World War II.

Company F, 3rd Battalion, 8th Infantry, engaged in a fierce battle with the enemy, and took over the position of the 8th Infantry. The Germans were retreating, and the American soldiers were advancing.

The soldiers fought with great determination and courage, and the battle raged for hours. Finally, the Americans emerged victorious, and the German troops were forced to retreat. The victory was a significant one for the 83rd Division, and it proved that the American army was capable of taking on the German forces and coming out on top.

The victory was not without its sacrifices, however. Many American soldiers lost their lives in the battle, and those who survived were left with deep wounds and physical and emotional scars. But despite the hardships, the soldiers remained steadfast in their commitment to their country and their fellow soldiers, and they continued to fight with all of their might until the war was over.

The victory at the Battle of the Bulge was a turning point in the war, and it paved the way for further American victories in the coming months. The American soldiers' resilience and determination were a testament to the power of the human spirit in the face of adversity.

MONSTER, MONSTER

Destruction, famine, disease and unrest are cited as things to follow in the wake of advancing Allied forces, according to German propaganda and those who write for the German press. The Allied forces are today going all-out in their attempt to defeat the enemy. Among these forces are the American troops, who have just arrived in the United States.

A doctor, a member of the German medical profession, told the reporter that the disease was spreading fast. The doctor said that the disease had spread to the north, east and south of the country, and that it was now reaching the United States. He said that the disease was being transported by the ships that are coming from the countries of the world.

The disease is known as the "Black Death," and it has been spreading rapidly throughout the world. It is caused by a virus that is carried by rats and is transmitted to humans by the bite of an infected rat or by contact with the blood or other bodily fluids of an infected person.

In one of the issues of Life magazine, a picture was shown of a plane flying over the German countryside. It was taken by a photographer who was with the American forces in the area. The plane was flying low overhead, and the photographer was able to capture a picture of the plane as it flew by.

The plane was on a mission to drop supplies to the soldiers in the front lines. The pilot was able to make a safe landing, and the supplies were delivered to the troops.

Blasted by 324th

The effectiveness of a 324th-minute American artillery barrage was conclusively proven by the 324th Field Artillery Regiment, during the recent fighting in the Ardennes. The regiment attack was so well supported by the 324th Field Artillery that the enemy was forced to retreat.

In Normandy and the other in England, the 324th Field Artillery Regiment has been in constant action.

Although he has fought the German forces for over ten years, York still feels that his work is not yet finished. He has been called to duty in the Pacific, and he is now in command of the 324th Field Artillery Regiment.

WIREMEN ARE ALSO ENGINEERS

The wire section of the 324th Field Artillery Regiment has proved its versatility when the men turned combat engineers for a month and a half. They crossed a river in the midst of the fighting at Luxembourg.

Somebody in the office got the idea of using trees and logs to make a bridge.

The men of the 324th Field Artillery Regiment have been trained in combat engineering and have the ability to build a bridge from whatever materials are available. They have built bridges from tree trunks, logs, and even from the bodies of dead animals.
